

What Youth Soccer Has Meant To Me

My youth soccer experience has been like none other. I started playing soccer when I was five and now I'm here in my senior year winding down my final season of high school soccer. As a kid, soccer was purely a source of enjoyment, but as I grew older it became much more. When I started getting towards the ages of ten and twelve, soccer was still fun, but winning was the thing that put it over the top in its enjoyment level. In Chickasha I pretty much played with the same people through my youth. This not only gave me the time to get to know each person and how they play but also it allowed me to make some everlasting friendships. Youth soccer has also taught me many life long values such as, hard work, communication, and teamwork. In Chickasha we didn't always have the best players, but because we worked as a team we were able to out play any team that challenged us which turned us into a winning team. That idea of teamwork came every coach I ever had. Through great teamwork, coaching, and hard work I was able to learn the facts of life that sometimes you win and sometimes you lose and not everything goes your way. I guess what I'm trying to say is that my youth soccer experience has meant more me than I ever would have expected. Youth soccer has been a time of my life that left me great memories and life long values.
